What comes next?

It's July, and the holiday has me feeling all sorts of patriotic. You see, I'm a big fan of Hamilton, and a line from King George's refrain keeps popping into my head. What Comes Next? In his ridiculously catchy tune, he challenges the Founding Fathers to see beyond the revolution, and to be ready for the realities of governing a young county.

Sort of feels like we're still figuring out What Comes Next?

June was a tumultuous month of change for our country. Many are asking that very question. What Comes Next? Change is hard, and can divide us. But change can also inspire us to evaluate what's most important, what feels sacred, and what to support.

I think we ought to be challenging ourselves with the same change catalyst as an organization. As a professional networking group for women, we have seen the amazing impact of ANEW over the years. I was inspired a few months ago by our panel of ANEW members (current and retired) who shared the influence of a singular growth season and the amazing number of new members we gained due to one individual's focused efforts. What if we sought another season of growth and expansion? Of ensuring our membership represents the unique fabric of women in our community, representing our diverse backgrounds, professions and interests? The ANEW Board is looking for ways to grow and invite the talented women in our community to join and make us better as an organization.

How can we be creative in fulfilling our mission to advance women, ensure equal participation, and support women entrepreneurs? How can we nurture the next wave of leaders within the business community and advocate for representation? I'd urge anyone who feels
