President's Letter

Can we talk multi-tasking? Do you consider yourself a pro when it come to juggling myriad responsibilities and squeezing every minute out of your day?

I've seen pros and cons for multi-tasking. Some singing its praises, while others say it's basically the downfall of society (loss of focus, clarity, blah blah). I kid ... sort of, but truly, it's something that's become so ingrained in me as a professional I'm not sure how I would function without it.

Maybe multi-tasking grew out of our needs to wear many hats at once. It seems in every professional role I've held, an accurate job title has always eluded me because even within my vocation I'm typically doing the job of at least three different people. Then, we add on our other roles and definitions really become complicated. Our personal lives include many different roles – partner, parent, sibling, caregiver, daughter, friend, mentor. The list gets longer when we consider extracurricular responsibilities – Board Member, volunteer, coach, room-mom, runner, crafter, book-club-member, small-groupie. No wonder we have to multi-task?

As I write this, I'm perched atop the ice rink watching my 8-year-old try out for travel hockey. Earlier today I took off work for a few hours to attend a field trip. When I'm done writing, I'll send a few client emails. I'm not trying to glorify "busy" or seek sympathy. We are all on this same path, and some seasons are busier than others. It's just what we do.

The truth is, I love to multi-task, because if I can find efficiency during busy times, I can find quiet during others. If I can multi-task now, that means I can zero-task later. Reading before bed, watching garbage TV with my husband, playing Worlde with my morning coffee, talking Pokémon with my kids. I treasure those moments when I can be solely focused on what really matters, without distraction into the craziness of the rest of the day. Sure - it means sometimes I miss a cue on a zoom meeting because I'm reading a non-related email. Or I listen to professional development webinars while on the treadmill. Or write ANEW correspondence during hockey tryouts. But I'm looking forward to the 2004. She worked in the Crime Prevention Unit for several years and then transferred to the Adult Investigations Unit in 2019. After being in the detective office for about 2 years, she was promoted to the rank of Sergeant in May of 2021. She was then asked to take over as the Public Information Officer, which is her current assignment. Her passion is definitely community policing and she loves attending events where she can interact and engage with people in the community.

Anna will be covering safety tips that are useful for women who are walking alone in a parking lot, women who live alone, firearms safety, watching out for scams, and general safety tips to prevent burglaries and thefts from vehicles. She will also cover when to call 911 and how to report a crime.
